Elements 2019 has the same limitations as the 2019 Photoshop Elements for Canvas. As of May 1st 2019, in Canvas Settings the 3D Scratch and AE Scratch options will no longer be available. (opens in a new window) Elements 2019 is no longer supported for lightweight 3D or stereographic display options. In addition, Elements 2019 doesn't support a full suite of effects, such as blur, vignette, or partial color. Image resizing is an effective way to quickly give non-destructive changes to a large number of images. We could go on and on about how native APIs will transform the look of our Photoshop tools and workflow for us, but we'll save that for a future episode and reserve all the juicy details to that time. Moving back to the future, the number one job of these native APIs is to render the past in pixels to a modern perspective. Just like how we can make videos in the future look like they're from the past, we can now with today's modern APIs to bring the past into Photoshop more directly for any of its toolset. It feels like the natural change that's underpinned by core technology that we're using to process and save today's imagery for a future that's very different. In many ways, this transition speaks to a new approach to workflows, but it's also a foundational set of policies that better reflects where we want to be as a company. As the role of Adobe and our products continues to evolve, this indigenous API strategy on Adobe MAX 2019 will provide the opportunity to talk more about this vision. And with that, we wish you the best in the future. We hope to see you again for future episodes of this podcast. And to those who have waited for this series, we sincerely thank you for your patience and understanding. Enhanced text and face editing features improve text editing and text size management. Additional editing tools are available in font areas and allow for precise text editing. Face-optimized guidelines and guides help maintain face alignment and improve visibility. The UI has been updated to make it more consistent across platforms.
