If you want more tools, the File menu allows you to add them. The toolbar is customizable; you can drag and drop items from the toolbar to the canvas, or the top of the window. You can use the menu at the top of the screen to access the toolbox, window size, mode, color mode, lock canvas, zoom in and out and set the resolution or the aspect ratio. You can also access filters, a palette (colors, actions, styles and presets), spot heal, levels, curves, adjustment layers, color balance, sharpen, brush, brush dynamics, Vector, Spot Healing Brush, Roughness optimizer, the History panel, the Events panel, the Services panel, the Info panel and the Help menu. You also get the right side of the screen to work icons, shape layers, layer mask, guides, layers, plug-ins and a menu to access the Layers panel, Channels, Smart-Saving, History, a recent files browser, etc. You can rotate the canvas, disable editing by layer visibility and many other features. On the left side of the screen, you'll find a menu for the stages. You get the usual tools including the Crop tool, a Spot healing brush and the History; you can also create your own tools in the toolbar. The toolbox should help even the best artist find what they need to craft images. Nevertheless, I was pleased with the new Find My Shots feature. It's a sure thing that I will use it every time I go on a photo site. During my work, I often have to find, not only missing photos, but pictures of certain subjects. The Find My Shots feature allows me to easily do just that, and it's certainly much easier than doing the same thing manually without counting photos on the screen.
