Photoshop has the ability to run full-resolution video as layers in the Layers panel. When saving for web, you can sharpen or color balance a video's layers after using the Video > Trim tool to remove unwanted portions. The video editing toolset can be found in Photoshop's Organizer, which is the destination for video footage when you export files for web. Once you're creating a design, you're ready to view it on multiple devices such as a desktop printer, a mobile device, or a web browser on your computer. For example, the mobile and desktop versions might differ slightly from one another, or small errors could show up on your computer but not on a mobile device. The other new feature from Photoshop 2018 is In-Place Adjustment. In a world where entire images get touched up and edited live, In-Place Adjustment takes us back to the times where we used to work hard on one or two layers and let it live. With this, you can choose an adjustment layer, alter its settings and then hit the scale or crop tool to tweak its settings. Using this feature will not remove the original adjustments, but it will change their settings, which will update the adjustments in the edited layer so that all editing remains intact.
